Skills play an important role in the success of an individual. The abilities of the individual have great impact on higher productivity, quality of life, well beingness, achievements and satisfaction. Twenty first century is known for globalization, revolutions in information and communication technology and rapid changes in business world which have increased demand of skilled workforce. It has become need of time to acquire the skills set that contribute not only to get employment but also to sustain there. It has opened a wide scope to develop active involvement in digital transformations, to acquire collaborative working style, to adopt changes quickly, to progress with creativity and innovations and to enrich potentials. Employers seek for employees with relevant workplace skills because it helps for smooth functioning of the business. It creates healthy environment to achieve set targets. Hence, employees need to showcase their potentials and skills to assure their effective performance at workplace. Due to this, unskilled employees remain unemployed or get low wages job which results into increase in poverty. There is a need to identify the gap between the skills required by the workplace and the skills possessed by human capital which will help to find out and remove root causes of unemployment. There are different types of unemployment problems such as over-skilling, under-skilling, skill gaps, skill shortages etc. According to Compn & Ilina, over skilling refers to the situation where a worker possesses more skills than higher current job requirements, under skilling refers to the situation where a worker does not meet with his/her job requirements. Skill gaps refer to the situation where a worker lacks the skills required by his/her current work place. Skill shortages refer to the situation where vacancies remaining filled or difficulty to fill due to lack of qualified employee. (Sri) Higgins advises to concentrate on young people having problems in obtaining employment. The attention should be given to unskilled, poor skilled, disabled people and people who belong to ethnic minorities or face the problem of gender inequality. (Sh) Bakula & et al describe the importance of skills anticipation. They argue that skills contribute to the growth of economy either by increase
